

Fine jewelry from a reputable source represents an intersection of emotional and financial value that few other purchases achieve. Understanding the investment characteristics of fine jewelry helps buyers make decisions that serve both purposes effectively. The materials in fine jewelry have intrinsic value independent of the craftwork applied to them. Platinum and gold retain market value as commodities. Certified diamonds from reputable grading laboratories trade in markets where quality is independently verifiable. The quality certification that makes dimend SCAASI's diamonds distinctive in the Chicago market also makes them more readily verifiable as assets. A GIA or AGS certificate that accurately describes a diamond's characteristics provides a basis for independent appraisal that uncertified stones do not offer.
