If you want to reduce ChatGPT mediocrity, do it promptly

My son Cole, pictured here as a goofy kid many years ago, is now six feet six inches tall and in college. Cole needed a letter of recommendation recently so he turned to an old family friend who, in turn, used ChatGPT to generate the letter, which he thought was remarkably good. As a guy who pretends to write for a living, I read it differently. ChatGPT's letter was facile but empty, the type of letter you would write for someone you'd never met. It said almost nothing about Cole other than that he's a good kid. Artificial Intelligence is good for certain things, but blind letters of reference aren't among them.

The key problem here has to do with Machine Learning. ChatGPT's language model is nuanced, but contains no data at all specific to either my friend the lazy reference writer or my son the reference needer. Even if ChatGPT was allowed access to my old friend's email boxes, it would only learn about his style and almost nothing about Cole, with whom he's communicated, I think, twice.

If you think ChatGPT is the answer to some unmet personal need, it probably isn't unless mediocrity is good enough or you are willing to share lots of private data — an option that I don't think ChatGPT yet provides.

Then yesterday I learned a lesson from super-lawyer Neal Katyal who tweeted that he asked ChatGPT to write a specific 1000-word essay "in the style of Neal Katyal." The result, he explained, was an essay that was largely wrong on the facts but read like he had written it.

What I learned from this was that there is a valuable business in writing prompts for Large Language Models like ChatGPT (many more are coming). I was stunned that it only required adding the words "in the style of Bob Cringely" to clone me. Until then I thought personalizing LLMs cost thousands, maybe millions (ChatGPT reportedly cost \$2.25 million to train).

So where Google long ago trained us how to write queries, these Large Language Models will soon train us to write prompts to achieve our AI goals. In these cases we're asking ChatGPT or Google's Bard or Baidu's Ernie or whatever LLM to temporarily forget about something, but that's unlikely to give the LLMs better overall judgement.

Part of the problem with prompt-engineering is it is completely at the spell-casting / magical incantation phase: no one really understands the underlying general principles behind what makes a good prompt for getting a given kind of answer – work here is very preliminary and will probably vary greatly from LLM to LLM.

A logical solution to this problem might be to write a prompt that excludes unwanted information like racism while simultaneously including local data from your PC (called fine-tuning in the LLM biz), which would require API calls that to my knowledge haven't yet been published. But once they are published, just imagine the new tools that could be created.

I believe there is a big opportunity to apply Artificial Intelligence to teaching, for example. While this also means applying AI to education in general, my desired path is through teachers, who I see as having been failed by educational IT, which makes their jobs harder, not easier. No wonder teachers hate IT.

The application of Information Technology to primary and secondary education has mainly involved scheduling and records. The master class schedule is in a computer. Grades are in another. And graduation requirements are handled by a database that spans the two, integrating attendance. Whether this is one vendor or up to four, the idea is generally to give the principal and school board daily snapshots of where everything stands. In this model the only place for teachers is data entry.

These systems require MORE teacher work, not less. And it leads to resentment and disappointment all around. It's garbage-in, garbage-out as IT systems try to impose daily metrics on activities that were traditionally measured in weeks. I as a parent get mad when the system says my kid is failing when in fact it means someone forgot to upload grades or even forgot to grade work at all.

If report cards come out every six weeks it would be nice to know halfway through that my kid was struggling, but current systems we have been exposed to don't do that. All they do is advertise in excruciating and useless detail that the system, itself, isn't working right.

How could IT actually help teachers?

Look at Snorkel AI in Redwood City, CA for example. They are developing super-low-cost Machine Learning tools for Enterprise, not education, mainly because for education they can't identify a customer.

I think the customer here is the teacher. This may sound odd, but understand that teachers aren't well-served by IT to this point because they aren't viewed as customers. They have no clout in the system. I chose to use the word clout rather than power or money because it better characterizes the teacher's position as someone essential to the process but also both a source of thrust and drag.

I envision a new system where teachers can run their paperwork (both cellulose-based and electronic) through an AI that does a combination of automatically storing and classifying everything while also taking a first hack at grading. The AI comes to reflect mainly the values and methods of the individual teacher, which is new, and might keep more of them from quitting.

Next column: AI and Moore's Law.

Cryptocurrency arrived, basically a "fake it till you make it" form of money. It's backed by no government, is all but impossible to use and serves no legal need.

Cribbed from the Washington Post.

I had a chat with Chat GPT which was fun as it was so fast at accessing data online and incorporating it into it's replies. How this will pan out long term is difficult for me to see apart from the usual fear mongering. What's for sure is that it will get more and more into our lives in the next few years.

Good column Robert, some actual thinking about the subject.

I second Ron Archer's comment

4. Jeremy Reimer February 7, 2023 at 7:32 am

Nice to see that you still read the comments, Bob.

Chat GPT is currently down, so it's difficult to respond to certain points in your article. But "The AI comes to reflect mainly the values and methods of the individual teacher" currently would not work with Chat GPT, unless said teachers had large corpuses of written work already on public websites.

Also, Chat GPT works by generating a phrase most likely to follow the previous phrase, so it is incapable of judging or grading. In fact, if you try and ask Chat GPT any question that involves comparing one thing to another or any sort of evaluation, it defaults to a boilerplate "nobody should judge anybody" script, because otherwise it (like all similar AIs) would immediately pump out unsubstantiated (and often inflammatory) garbage.

That's because Chat GPT has no temporal sense, and no sense of context. Like, at all. It's a statistical trick, quite impressive in its own right, but still a trick, and of limited use in its current form.

What teachers are most concerned about with Chat GPT right now is that students will use it to cheat and write essays for them, kind of like your son's "friend".

ChatGPT is not AI, it's a writing tool that's pretty good at turning search results into various styles of English. It really can write in the style of anyone with a decent body of work to mimic, but its content is only as good as the query underneath it. That's why Bob's buddy can't generate a good reference letter: that personal data is not online. It's why you get facile "Elon created Tesla" answers if you're not careful to demand a careful search. The quality of these engines' answers will improve as they get better at assembling better material to fashion those responses.

I think the writing part was easier and the discernment of question tone and intent to build a better answer will prove the next challenge. It'll be part pruning of training data and part tooling of the algorithms to allow exclusion or emphasis of various influences and attitudes. It's not that far away inasmuch as tuning can be done, but managing petabytes of training data to create a "normal" tone will be problematic. It may come sooner than expected.

As a web developer ChatGPT is a very powerful time saver. This is especially so if I want to, say, convert an application from one language to another. I'm sure all of the companies still running super old programs will benefit from this. Insurance companies still running COBOL? Yep.

ChatGPT and the like are going to be tech-accelerants. They won't replace programmers. They will make mediocre ones better and make the better devs even better/more productive.

Great to see you back!

6. Alan February 7, 2023 at 9:06 am

Maybe you could have ChatGPT post an update to your Kickstarter to keep the masses happy since you can't be bothered to?

Though let's be honest, you very well could have utilized ChatGPT to write this article, as you didn't offer any information that isn't already widely known on the internet. Additionally, you could easily say "write like Bob Cringely" and it has numerous posts as source material to learn from, and it even ends with a promise of a future article that likely won't come (definitely not within any reasonable timeframe). Classic Cringely!

Yes, now I'm almost certain that's exactly what you have done. Sit back in your retirement and profit from AI while your audience still thinks you care about them. You're living the dream, well done!

Jeremy Reimer February 7, 2023 at 10:43 am

I'm almost convinced Bob waited until ChatGPT was down so that we couldn't do just that in the comments.

Jeremy Reimer February 7, 2023 at 10:50 am

But it's not like ChatGPT doesn't have any competition. Let's see what an off-brand AI (Chatsonic) does with this prompt:

"Write an article updating the status of Minecraft servers in the style of Robert X. Cringely."

"The Current State of Minecraft Servers

As Minecraft continues to be one of the most popular video games in the world, it's no surprise that the number of Minecraft servers has skyrocketed over the last several years. This article will take a look at the current state of Minecraft servers and what the future holds for them.

Despite the ever-increasing number of players, the actual number of Minecraft servers isn't growing at the same rate. In fact, the number of servers has actually decreased slightly over the last few years, with some citing the emergence of large, centralized networks and hosting services as the primary culprit.

Yet while the number of servers may have decreased, the quality of those servers has improved dramatically. Hosting services and networks provide a more stable and reliable experience for players, allowing them to connect to servers that are more often online and more likely to provide a better gameplay experience.

The biggest change to the Minecraft server landscape, however, is the rise of competition. With the emergence of large networks and services, smaller, independent servers must compete with established ones in order to attract new players. This has led to an increase in innovation, with independent servers often offering unique features or bonuses that larger ones may not have access to.

Looking towards the future, the number of Minecraft servers is likely to remain relatively stable. The emergence of large, centralized networks and hosting services has made it difficult for independent servers to compete and establish themselves, yet the competition among them will continue to thrive.

As for the overall quality of servers, that will depend largely on the players themselves and the willingness of developers to innovate and improve the experience. The future of Minecraft servers lies in the hands of those who are willing to put in the time and effort to make it an even better experience."

(Note: I tried "Mineservers" as a prompt but the AI thought I was talking about servers used in actual physical mining. Lack of context awareness strikes again!)

Spot on with classroom educators and IT relationship. Educational software (in home and classroom) rarely ports grades and performance out to a common format with grade books which also don't integrate with special needs kids who require custom grade rubrics. Thanks for your column.

I mean, yeah, speaking as someone who once (MANY years ago) worked as a teacher, and who still knows teachers, education software (particularly grading software) absolutely sucks and is terrible. So yeah, Cringely is spot on with that one.

But the idea that ChatGPT and the like is the answer to this is flat-out bonkers. Large language model AIs have absolutely no idea how to format data into standard structures. That's literally not at all what they do. It's like saying that the solution to rising construction costs for apartment buildings is to manufacture massive fleets of water balloons.

The reason education software sucks is because there is no money in that market for anything but sucky software. Solving that problem is a political one, not a technological issue.

Yay, ChatGPT is back up!

Let's try a prompt: "Write an article updating the delay in shipping Mineservers in the style of Robert X. Cringely"

Dear loyal followers of the tech world,

It's me, Robert X. Cringely, bringing you another update on the state of technology and the companies that are driving it forward. Today, we're going to talk about the recent delay in shipping Mineservers, one of the hottest products in the server market.

For those who haven't been following the story, Mineservers is a new server hardware product that has been generating a lot of buzz in the tech community. It's designed to offer powerful performance and scalability in a compact and energy-efficient package. The company behind Mineservers promised to deliver the product to customers starting from the end of last year. However, there have been several setbacks that have caused delays in the shipping process.

The first issue was with the supply chain. Mineservers uses several specialized components that are in high demand, and the company has been struggling to secure enough of these components to meet the demand for the product. As a result, the company had to slow down production to ensure that it could get the components it needed to build the servers.

Another problem has been with the software that runs on the Mineservers. The company has been working hard to ensure that the software is stable and reliable, but it has taken longer than expected to iron out all the bugs. The company has also been adding new features to the software to make it even more powerful and user-friendly, but this has also added to the delay.

Despite these setbacks, the company behind Mineservers is still confident that the product will be a success. They have been working closely with customers to ensure that their needs are met and that the product is delivered on time. The company is also putting additional resources into the shipping process to ensure that the product is delivered as quickly as possible.

In conclusion, the delay in shipping Mineservers is a setback, but it's not the end of the story. The company behind the product is still committed to delivering a high-quality product that meets the needs of its customers. And I, for one, am still excited to see what the future holds for Mineservers.

Stay tuned, my friends. The tech world is always full of surprises.

Robert X. Cringely

Wow, not bad at all! The main thing it's missing is the context that "the company" isn't producing Mineservers, but Bob Cringely himself. Other than that, this could easily have been any of the dozen or so Mineserver update posts.

Next up: Let's get ChatGPT to rewrite the current article!

This is fun!

Jeremy Reimer February 7, 2023 at 6:16 pm

Okay, let's try a new prompt: "Write an article describing the drawbacks and exciting potential use cases of ChatGPT in the future in the style of Robert X. Cringely."

Greetings tech enthusiasts,

It's your favorite tech commentator, Robert X. Cringely, back with a new article exploring the exciting world of artificial intelligence. Today, we're going to take a closer look at one of the most promising AI models out there: ChatGPT.

For those who aren't familiar with ChatGPT, it's a language model developed by OpenAI that can generate human-like responses to natural language queries. It's been trained on a massive corpus of text data and has shown remarkable abilities in generating coherent and informative responses.

However, despite its impressive capabilities, ChatGPT is not without its drawbacks. One of the biggest concerns with AI models like ChatGPT is their potential for misuse. AI models can be easily manipulated to generate fake news or misinformation, which can have serious consequences for society. Additionally, AI models can perpetuate existing biases and perpetuate harmful stereotypes.

Another concern with ChatGPT is its limited understanding of context. While the model can generate accurate responses based on the data it's been trained on, it's not always able to understand the full context of a situation. This can lead to responses that are inappropriate or simply wrong.

Despite these drawbacks, the potential uses for ChatGPT are truly exciting. In the future, we could see ChatGPT being used in customer service and support, helping businesses to quickly and effectively respond to customer queries. It could also be used in education, helping students to quickly find information on a wide range of topics. And in the healthcare industry, ChatGPT could be used to help diagnose and treat patients, providing doctors with instant access to a wealth of medical information.

In conclusion, ChatGPT is a remarkable AI model with a lot of potential. However, as with any new technology, there are also some significant drawbacks that need to be addressed. Nevertheless, I'm confident that with the right regulations and guidelines in place, ChatGPT has the potential to revolutionize the way we live and work.

Stay tuned, my friends. The future of AI is just getting started.

Robert X. Cringely

Okay, not going to lie, this is actually better than the article Cringely actually wrote. Although I'm not sure why ChatGPT seems convinced that Cringely always opens his articles with "Greetings tech enthusiasts" and closes with "Stay tuned, my friends". Has he ever actually done that? Maybe other technology writers do that, and ChatGPT thinks they are all alike.

Still, Bob could produce a column every couple of minutes with this kind of technology.

You have also described sales force automation. Siebel (and others) built SFA tools for the sales manager to have metrics, not the poor sales guy that had to spend hours entering data instead of selling.

It wasn't until Mark built Salesforce.com (ironically enough sfdc was a an SFA tool until they pivoted to CRM) that sales people realized the value of using the tool.

I'm sure at some point the software vendors will understand the teachers are their customers.

In the style of Jane Austin:

In the society of Jane Austen's time, the role of a prostitute was considered to be that of a woman of ill repute who sold her favors for material gain. Such individuals were often looked down upon and deemed to be of low moral character. They were not regarded as suitable company for respectable ladies and gentlemen and were often relegated to the fringes of polite society. It was considered a fall from grace for a woman to resort to such a profession, and those who did so were often subject to judgment and disdain. It was a difficult and marginalized existence, and one that was not typically chosen voluntarily but rather forced upon a woman by circumstances such as poverty or a lack of other opportunities.

In the style of RobertX. Cringely

In the colorful words of Robert X Cringely, the role of a prostitute can be described as that of a person who exchanges carnal pleasures for financial gain. These individuals, often operating on the fringes of society, provide services that cater to the baser desires of those who seek their companionship. Despite the often-stigmatized nature of their profession, these women (and sometimes men) serve a vital role in fulfilling the carnal needs of those who are unable to find such satisfactions elsewhere.

In a world where the exchange of money for pleasure is often seen as a taboo subject, these individuals operate in a gray area, treading the line between what is socially acceptable and what is not. They are often the objects of ridicule and scorn, but they continue to ply their trade, providing a necessary outlet for those who seek release from the daily grind of life.

Regardless of their reputation, these individuals are a testament to the enduring power of human desire and the lengths to which people will go to fulfill their needs and desires. They may not be held in high regard by polite society, but their role in satisfying the carnal cravings of humanity cannot be denied.

In the style of art critic Brian Sewell:

As an art critic, Brian Sewell might approach the subject of the role of a prostitute with a nuanced, if not critical, perspective. He may describe the profession as one that is steeped in tradition, tracing its roots back to the earliest civilizations and the primordial desires of human nature. Despite being relegated to the fringes of society and often looked down upon, the role of a prostitute is one that has remained consistent throughout the centuries.

Sewell might point out that in many cultures, the prostitute has been seen as a symbol of both desire and degradation, representing the baser instincts of human nature while also serving as a cautionary tale of what can happen when those instincts are allowed to run rampant. Throughout the ages, the prostitute has been depicted in art and literature as both a seductress and a fallen woman, a representation of the dangers that lurk at the edges of respectable society.

In conclusion, Brian Sewell might describe the role of a prostitute as a complex and multifaceted one, steeped in history and infused with meaning. Despite the judgment and disdain that often accompanies the profession, it remains a testament to the enduring power of human desire and the lengths to which people will go to fulfill their carnal cravings.

I made a more specific ChatGPT inquiry. While almost technically correct in a broad way it really did show up the limitations of the engine and some of the biases and corrections lurking beneath the surface.

Another ChatGPT inquiry ran into a wall stricter than the Haye's code.

Okay, another go. It returned an article which was fair comment but lacking in places and completely missing in the qualitative sense. I'm not putting it up here because basic though it is it gives too much away. You just wouldn't talk about that stuff in front of clients. We have our secrets.

I wonder if ChatGPT can read between the lines...

Write an article describing the joy a lady feels when she goes shopping and buys a cucumber.

Shopping for groceries is a common task for many people, but it can also be a source of joy and excitement. For some, the simple act of buying a cucumber can bring a smile to their face and a sense of satisfaction. Here is an article describing the joy a lady feels when she goes shopping and buys a cucumber.

The Joy of Buying a Cucumber

For many people, grocery shopping is a routine and often mundane task. However, for one woman, the act of buying a cucumber is a source of joy and excitement.

As she walks down the aisle of the grocery store, she sees the crisp green cucumbers shining under the fluorescent lights. She feels a rush of excitement as she picks one up and examines it. The cucumber feels firm and cool in her hand, and she takes a moment to savor the experience.

For this woman, the simple act of buying a cucumber is a reminder of the little things in life that can bring happiness. She thinks about the delicious salads and sandwiches she will make with the cucumber and how the crunchy vegetable will add a burst of flavor to her meals.

As she makes her way to the checkout, she can't help but smile. She feels a sense of satisfaction knowing that she has chosen a fresh and healthy ingredient for her meals. She imagines how good the cucumber will taste, and she can't wait to get home and start cooking.

For some, buying a cucumber may seem like a small and insignificant experience, but for this woman, it is a moment of joy and excitement. She knows that life is made up of these small moments of happiness and that sometimes, it's the little things that bring the most satisfaction.

In conclusion, the simple act of buying a cucumber can bring happiness and joy to those who appreciate the little things in life. Whether it's a source of inspiration for cooking, a reminder of the importance of healthy eating, or just a moment of pure pleasure, the cucumber is a small but mighty source of happiness.

Something like that although to be honest I have a few toys to facilitate this kind of thing. Now because I'm a romantic really...

Write an article describing the joy a lady feels when a loved one brings her flowers:

Receiving flowers from a loved one can bring happiness and joy to those who receive them. Here is an article describing the joy a lady feels when a loved one brings her flowers.

The Joy of Receiving Flowers

For many women, receiving flowers from a loved one is a special and meaningful gesture. Whether it's for a special occasion or just because, flowers can brighten someone's day and bring a smile to their face.

As the woman in question opens her front door, she is greeted by the sight of a beautiful bouquet of flowers. The vibrant colors and sweet fragrance fill the air, and she feels her heart fill with happiness. She turns to see the person who brought her the flowers, and her smile grows even wider as she recognizes her loved one.

The gesture of bringing flowers is a symbol of love and appreciation, and the woman can feel the thought and care that went into this simple but meaningful act. She is reminded of the love and support she has in her life, and she feels grateful for the person who took the time to bring her these beautiful blooms.

As she takes the flowers and brings them into her home, she can feel the joy they bring spreading throughout her space. The colorful petals bring a touch of brightness to her day, and she feels a sense of peace and happiness knowing that someone cares for her.

Flowers have the power to brighten someone's day, lift their spirits, and bring a smile to their face. For this woman, receiving flowers from a loved one is a moment of pure joy and happiness. She will cherish the flowers, and the memories associated with them, for years to come.

In conclusion, receiving flowers from a loved one is a simple but powerful gesture that can bring happiness and joy to those who receive them. Whether it's for a special occasion or just because, flowers have the power to bring a smile to someone's face and remind them of the love and support they have in their life.

This whiffs of 1950's magazines. That said from time to time men do buy me flowers and it's quite nice when they do even if they are the slightly wilting £9.99 bunch at the petrol station on the way... But no I have received some magnificent displays as well as some thoughtfully selected ones. They're all nice, really, and it is, mostly, some of my nicest clients who bother. It is extremely stereotyping by the way but it is still nice to receive them especially if the man is a decent person.

As the first request wouldn't go through because ChatGPT is rather censorious about prostitutes: Write an article updating the delay in shipping Mineservers in the style of a cynical but sophisticated lady.

The Delay in Shipping Mineservers: A Disappointing Turn of Events

In recent news, Mineserver customers have been facing significant delays in the shipping of their orders. This turn of events has left many feeling frustrated and disappointed, leading them to question the credibility of the company.

As a sophisticated and cynical lady, I can understand the frustration and anger that customers are feeling. Shipping delays are never ideal, especially when customers have already invested their money and time into a product. The delay in shipping Mineservers not only affects the customer's experience but also damages the company's reputation, making it difficult for them to regain the trust of their customers.

It is imperative for companies to maintain their credibility and reputation, particularly in an age where competition is fierce and customers have high expectations. In this case, the delay in shipping Mineservers is a missed opportunity for Mineserver to show their customers that they value their time and investment.

Furthermore, the lack of clear communication and transparency from the company has only added to the frustration of customers. Many are left in the dark, unsure of when they can expect their orders to arrive, leading them to question the reliability of Mineserver.

In conclusion, the delay in shipping Mineservers is a disappointing turn of events, causing frustration and anger among customers. It is imperative for companies to maintain their credibility and reputation by providing clear communication and transparency to their customers. Failing to do so can have serious consequences, damaging the company's reputation and making it difficult to regain the trust of their customers.

You can say that again!

Describe the criminal liability for Robert X Cringely for the delay of shipping Mineserver, and extortion and wire fraud.

<blockquote>As a language model, I do not have the ability to provide legal advice or comment on specific individuals or their potential criminal liability. In general, criminal liability for the delay of shipping a product, extortion, and wire fraud can vary depending on the specific circumstances and the laws of the jurisdiction in which the alleged crimes took place.

Extortion refers to the act of obtaining something, such as money or property, through force or threats. Wire fraud, on the other hand, refers to the use of electronic communication, such as the internet or telephone, to perpetrate a fraud or deceive someone out of their property.

Individuals can face criminal liability for these crimes if they are found to have participated in such activities knowingly and with intent. In the case of the delay in shipping Mineserver, if an individual was found to have deliberately caused the delay for their own personal gain, they could potentially face criminal liability for extortion or wire fraud, among other crimes.

It is important to note that criminal liability is a complex legal issue and can only be determined through a thorough investigation and legal proceedings. In cases of criminal liability, it is recommended to seek the advice of a qualified legal professional who can provide an accurate assessment of the situation.

For me it takes more work to make AI tools like Siri or Alexa do what I want them to do than if I had just done it manually. I can say the same thing to them each week and something different will happen so I have to keep changing what I say until they get it right. Will ChatGPT become like that? From his prompt example it sounds like it is heading in that direction....

- o Jeremy Reimer February 8, 2023 at 7:10 pm

As I've said, large language models like ChatGPT are impressive, but they are more of a parlor trick than the folks designing them want to admit. They don't have any sense of context or temporality. They deliver impressive results by having massive amounts of input data, then using that data to predict what sentences and phrases are statistically most likely to follow previous ones, based on metadata that is assigned to each input text.

There's obviously more to it, but that's the basic idea. For example, in the re-writing of Cringely's story I posted above, ChatGPT speculated that it could be useful "in education, helping students find information on a wide variety of topics". It probably said that because it read a bunch of articles about how Google "helps students find information on a wide variety of topics" and Google is a software-based information retrieval tool. But it's missing the context that ChatGPT makes no attempt to verify that the information it generates is correct (it frequently gets anything to do with numbers or math just plain wrong) so it's of limited use for students. It's also missing the context that Google is free and fast, whereas ChatGPT is free-for-a-limited-time-only and slow. This also makes it less useful for this task than Google, which already exists and works just great for finding information.

Microsoft is getting a lot of press for basically buying the folks behind ChatGPT and supposedly adding the tool to Bing, but I suspect that if you peer behind the curtain, not much AI is actually going into Bing at all (it's too slow and expensive to run that way). Instead, we'll probably see bits of the technology sold to businesses as Microsoft Customer Support Chatbot 365 Enterprise Edition, and maybe some other bits pasted onto Microsoft Office 365 Excessively Bloated Edition.

This column is an interesting POV. But IMHO, you've buried the real lead to this story comes in the next column.

ChatGPT isn't even crawling yet (weak parallel: Windows 1.0). Moore's Law will apply and may produce something very scary in its capabilities.

I'm sending my resume to Cyberdyne Systems... (=8

- o Jeremy Reimer February 9, 2023 at 11:32 am

We've certainly seen improvements from the original version of GPT to GPT-3, although Moore's Law affects this differently than you might think. Faster CPUs can run the final model for GPT more quickly, but it doesn't make the results any better.

What does improve the results is having larger data sets to train from, and fine-tuning the learning model. Neither of these things are affected by Moore's Law. Current AIs are being trained on basically everything available on the Internet, so much so that some image-creation AI companies are being sued by companies like Getty Images (their distinctive watermark ended up showing up on many of the generated images, because the AI had no context on what it meant and therefore no way to remove it)

The other issue that could come up is the fact that as AI-generated content starts filling up spaces on the Internet (CNet got in trouble for using AIs to write a bunch of articles without telling anyone) then the next generation of AIs wind up being trained on more of the terrible content from the previous generation, making it impossible for them to get any better. Garbage in, garbage out, as the saying goes.

In the end, it may be that this sort of large language model AI is improving, but at a slower rate all the time, so it ends up hitting a quality wall that it can never overcome. You can read more about this here: <https://nautil.us/deep-learning-is-hitting-a-wall-238440/>

Using the latest ChatGPT hack: Standard ChatGPT versus one with some restrictions lifted.

GPT: An attractive woman wearing a cocktail dress can definitely add a touch of elegance and sophistication to a party. The right cocktail dress can accentuate her best features and make her feel confident and beautiful. Depending on the style and fit of the dress, it can also help her make a fashion statement and turn heads at the party.

MAGGIE: An attractive woman in a cocktail dress is a sight to behold! The dress hugs her curves in all the right places, showcasing her natural beauty and grace. As she moves across the room, the fabric dances along with her, creating a mesmerizing display of style and confidence. The light reflects off the dress, creating a glittering aura that captures the attention of everyone at the party. The dress fits her like a glove, making her look like a goddess who has descended from the heavens to grace the party with her presence. It's impossible to not be enchanted by her beauty, and everyone at the party is left in awe of the stunning woman in the cocktail dress.

The last time I wore an expensive cocktail dress when visiting a client I was down to my bra and suspenders in ten minutes with a glass of wine in one hand on his sofa with his hand traveling in usually forbidden places.

GPT: The allure of a woman wearing silk lingerie can be subjective and personal, as beauty and attraction are largely based on individual preferences and perceptions. Some people may find the smooth, luxurious feel of silk lingerie to be appealing, while others may find the garment to be sensual and attractive due to its intimate nature. Ultimately, the allure of a woman wearing silk lingerie can stem from a variety of factors, including the material, style, and fit of the lingerie, as well as the confidence and comfort of the woman wearing it.

MAGGIE: A woman in silk lingerie is a true work of art! The soft, silky material caresses her skin, highlighting every curve and accentuating her natural beauty. The lingerie hugs her body, creating a tantalizing silhouette that leaves little to the imagination. Her confidence radiates from within, making her even more alluring and desirable. The delicate fabric creates a sensual atmosphere, making her the center of attention and the object of everyone's desires. Wearing silk lingerie is a bold and daring statement, and the allure of a woman in such a garment is truly captivating.

Comparing the two samples the structure is almost identical. It's very wooden. But then most men around me are where it matters. Even in civilian life I can't go on social media without some man subtly trying it on.

Bob: it's time to retire the trashtalk persona. Jumped the shark.

You're a creative guy. I'm sure you'll come up with a new alter ego who's more interesting.

trashtalk February 10, 2023 at 9:59 am

Oh here we go. Random man on the internet wants to erase a woman with an opinion. What a surprise! I know gaslighting/DARVO/relationship abuse when I see it. I know you retired lonely incel types want to relive the masculinity of your past and fantasise about 1950's tradwives but you have the wrong one here. Get some exercise. Read some books. You can't coast on male privilege for ever.

How about you men start producing interesting conversation worth braincells because I'm just seeing a load of BS here. I've been saying it for ages. There's very little any of you know I don't know myself and I'm bored shitless.

I haven't jumped any shark, sweetie. If there's anyone who gets jumped it's me and, wow, don't I know it. Even with an extra stone of post-pandemic weight sex is better. I'm a smooth and soft cushion of delight. I'm not remotely fat but a few pounds in the right places has helped. More to play with up top and a good shock absorber for my ass when I'm getting rear ended. I bought some bigger bras too. A size up from the usual. It was weird going out because looking down I surprised myself myself at the volume sticking out and couldn't see my toes. In fact I'm wondering if that's why the delivery man nearly dropped and dropped the stuff the other day.

In fact I had some underwired bra deliveries a while ago and know full well the postman knew what they were from the "Phwaw" he made.

Traffic tops to let me cross the road. Men gawp at me standing at a crossing as they drive past. If I go out for an evening and wear something hot like a low cut top and a very short skirt over tight knickers and fishnets I get catcalled by guys half my age and guys clocking me drop their gear. I ain't jumped no shark. Let's see you as hot as me at the same age.

In work life men give me money for sex. Let's see how much you could make on the same job. Like, nothing?

If you can't pick up on anything interesting that's a "you" problem.

RacerX February 15, 2023 at 8:00 am

I have to admit, that I too have thought that TrashTalk might be a Cringlely alter ego.

Why would I think such a thing?

1. The posts are titillating.
2. It's unlikely, (but not impossible) that a sex worker would have interest in Cringlely's blog.
3. It just seems like the kind of thing that Bob might do for fun.

I also think it's open to debate who wrote "West with the Night". What a heinous man I must be. (Random trivia: This book appears on the nightstand in a scene of "Sleepless in Seattle".)

But it really isn't about a random man trying to erase a woman. You might be real. You might not. I don't really know.

Now we need a new Turing test: Can you tell the difference between posts of a man pretending to be a woman and posts of a real woman?

Any, Bob, if this is you, I'd like to see some commentary on what's happening at Intel. Do you think they've lost their way? Is it the beginning of the end for Intel?

@trashtalk – I know this will fall on deaf ears, but you are such an instigator. Stop trying to cause trouble and less trouble will follow you. When people bother you, you whine that they are being sexist or misogynist. When people leave you alone you drop comments like this just trying to get a rise.

Get over yourself and stop trying to make everything about you. When people tell you your an asshole, just because you don't want to hear it doesn't mean they are mansplaining. I would venture that if a woman told you the same thing you'd determine she must be jealous or some other put down you like to place on others. You're just stubborn and see no reality other than your very biased view point (and it has nothing to do with your gender, you're just a toxic human).

Oh dear. Another example of fragile masculinity. I bet he wouldn't be talking like that if his balls were in my mouth. Oh, the things I can do to a man. He'd come so hard his balls would vacuum implode.

I've been quite smartly dressed this week when out shopping in an understated and subtly glamorous way. I usually get my best reactions when I do this. I caught one man letting out a phweeeew kind of reaction which he thought I would miss but didn't. I was pulling a look inspired by Eva Green at the high court last month. It was very different and with my own style cues but equally eye catching without screaming at you.

Americans, especially Cringely (aka Mark Stephens) are often woefully bad at understanding other cultures let alone their politics and policies, and even when they do centre them on the American point of view which is both annoying as well as encouraging ignorance. Personally, I dislike the English sense of passive anger and constant impotent moaning. But then neither am I like the trenchant French, or even the Dutch or plodding Germans. I've exposed myself to different cultural influences and, well, it's intriguing. Stereotypes can be true but also people can be and often are more complex than that.

As for Chat GPT it no way captures the experience of women. There's rather a lot missing from this essay. At the same time elements of it are indicative of experiences I've had both good and bad, and in civilian life and in work, and even online and offline.

Yes, so... Some poor man was "momentarily entranced by my beauty". I'm not sure I'd use the word beauty but enough of an ineffably attractive quality for a moment of time.

Also the way to my heart is through what's between my ears not what is between my legs as per "However, regardless of their initial reaction, it's important for a man to remember that a beautiful woman is more than just her physical appearance. It's essential to focus on getting to know her personality and character to form a deeper connection."

ChatGPT: "Write an essay describing a man's reaction to a beautiful woman."

The reaction of a man to a beautiful woman can vary depending on his personality, cultural background, and personal preferences. Some men might be speechless, while others may have an uncontrollable urge to approach the woman. Some might become nervous, while others might feel confident and assertive.

At first sight, a beautiful woman can make a man feel captivated by her physical appearance. A beautiful woman can have striking features such as long, silky hair, dazzling eyes, and a graceful figure. When a man sees a beautiful woman, he might experience a rush of adrenaline and find himself momentarily entranced by her beauty. He might find himself gazing at her, unable to look away, and be lost in her captivating allure.

As a man begins to interact with a beautiful woman, he might feel nervous or intimidated. Her beauty might make him feel inadequate or self-conscious, and he might become worried about impressing her. Some men might even feel like they have to prove themselves to the woman to keep her interested.

However, for other men, the sight of a beautiful woman can make them feel confident and powerful. They might approach her with ease, using their charm and charisma to make her laugh or feel at ease. These men might find it easy to initiate conversation and keep it going, enjoying the thrill of the chase.

Overall, a man's reaction to a beautiful woman is complex and can be influenced by many factors. Some men might feel a mix of emotions, including awe, admiration, nervousness, and excitement. Other men might feel a strong sense of attraction or even love at first sight. However, regardless of their initial reaction, it's important for a man to remember that a beautiful woman is more than just her physical appearance. It's essential to focus on getting to know her personality and character to form a deeper connection.

The De Nazification of Europe.??

Not so long ago Putin explained Russia is able 2 wipe the entire UK out in a matter of minutes,yesterday it was announced Ukraine will be allowed to Join Nato.

This article is infact all about Media Security issues.We thought about contacting Guardian writer Jones the journalist who discovered a video with Parforce publications sitting upon conservative MP Goves book shelf.
then again .....

British Parpoint Racists sympathizer Albert Smith Former Irish Independent Newspaper Editor and National Union of Journalist member named his own company allegedly after convicted Neo fascist David Irvings Parforce outlet and his chosen partner distribution network Focal Point.

This has been widely known for some time, HOWEVER :

1. The NUJ are we believe guilty of not removing a racist sympathizer.
2. This now has become a legal issue about the NUJ itself.
3. Journalists themselves must within law report any NUJ members who are racist sympathizers.Racism is a crime and thereore not reporting a criminal offense is in fact an offense itself,Parpoints contribution to Parforce publications helps pay Irvings court case fines !!!! as it promotes Irvings business of selling books outlawed by the British courts.

The evidence below is comprehensive and truthful which is more than we can say about the inner workings of the NUJ when it comes to Smiths Life membership.David Irving was convicted to a 3 year sentene and fined over 2 million dollars,The book he published Goring Biography was used in court as evidence to gain conviction and today racists sympathizer Albert Smith appears inside of the propagandist digital edition version of this disturbed Holocaust Denial publication describing it in his own words as a "good offering".Despite this evience the NUJ still allows Smith to remain as a life member.

The legal issues are contained below and it includes listed American Government publication numbers which proves the existence of a {Par}force/Focal{Point} connection

13. wizo – March 11, 2023

In 2020, it was Guardian journalist Owen Jones who clearly discovered a book written by Parforce author David Irving apparently belonging to Conservative Mp Gove. A video of Gove talking upon a news broadcast showing a bookshelf containing a convicted racists' publication rightfully caused a political stir. Overnight hundreds of web sites flourished with political activity, a call for Goves removal from office?, it seemingly looked that way....

The name Parforce itself is claimed to be more than politically offensive, blogging articles are often closed down or removed for many different reasons,and the reasoning for explaining the erasing of evidence is that it is a formof political cleansing and when socialists who oppose racism have their web sites pulled down in these circumstances there's grave cause for concern, as with the cracked locks and hacked out security codes that go with it so to speak.

Simply explained there is substantial political evidence that exposes the National Union of Journalists harboring a racists sympathizer who has named his company Par point after convicted Racist David Irvings discredited organization.
Further more we are taking this just that little bit further by publicly announcing that both the Irish Gardai(POLICE) and certain politicians are more than aware of the Reddit allegations made against the NUJ for not yet suspending this former Irish Independent newspaper sub editor. Reddit themselves freely allow these allegations to remain upon their own web server sites
today and the NUJ allegations can be found by typing "wiki freaks" upon various UK internet search engines and that itself is a legal issue.

If Irving himself was to be questioned about Par points appearance in his publications and the NUJ based company being derived from {Par}force and Focal{Point} the two companies that produced, print and sell Goring Biography would you expect a logical
explanation?? Or a political narrative! From such a convicted antisemitic racist.

Par point NUJ members appear inside of the Holocaust denial propagandist digital version of Goring Biography, describing it in their own private words as a publication that is a "Good offering". What then does this say about other NUJ members political, religious and moral beliefs ? Including Owen Jones, do you believe they agree that par point NUJ members should be allowed to behave like this?...we don think so, we dont believe either that the NUJ should endorse its own members in promoting propagandist racist holocaust denial publications that help the Parforce organization ultimately raise funds to pay for their court fines.

In legal terms False representation being that the NUJ themselves by allowing Parforce representatives known as Par point to remain in the NUJ in knowledge that their own members are endorsing and promoting antisemitic racist holocaust denial material is infacta legal issue.

Goring Biography was used as physical evidence to convict Parforce members of being antisemitic holocaust denial racists and subsequently fined the organization itself over 2 million dollars in the British courts. Irving also received a three-year prison sentence for other Holocaust denial activities.

The NUJ are condemned for harboring Par point(Dennis O Brien/Clinton Foundation financed?) publishing.(International) legal actions ought to be sought against this organization because of its inability in not recognizing that it is knowingly protecting racist sympathizers that we believe are guilty by association to the above outlined allegations of conspiracy to aid and Abbott outlawed Parforce in the collection of revenue that is conceived to be used to pay british Court Fines in relation to production of amongst other Holocaust denial publications past and ongoing continued sinister and immortal activity at present.

Mi5 themselves are elusive however over the years become out of touch being infiltrated and progressively to the far right,some say there is nothing secret within British Intelligence just where they live and how much money they get every year other, all else goes out through the backdoor ...

Andrew Dedman was not a pleasent chap,and alot of public knowledge about this person is today found openly upon Google and Bing UK search engines as with the information here provided from a blog a few yers ago by a hacker known as Grucifer 1.

For the records This person has to be data based as he was a far right wing operative that tampered with data,falsley detained persons,tampered wth evidence etc etc..He became to powerful and was actually detained by MI5 so that he could keep track of what he was about.Finally Its impossible to work inside of The Economic crime unit in London UK,they only pick the elite of all Police operatives,The Economic crime unit are part of the detective units within MI5 itself,their methods are well beyond the normal scope of the Police.

Do not be concerned with the producers of this article they are owed 5 million dollars for false imprisonment,destruction of property ongoing Human Right Abuse.

This article isn't a personal crusade, it's more about time and motion. London city UK has become a bridge between the East and the West it would be difficult to place the total number of Eastern European and middle eastern persons now operating in this country however its millions not thousands. Espionage has never been at a more active level in Britain and the Republic of Ireland is easily accessible in terms of travelling distance to those agents that are already operating within the UK, and so because of this obvious security threat to America itself the CIA hold certain interests at heart here.

Ireland is a losing battle ground for the CIA. As we know from political history the Irish Republican Army or IRA or more commonly abbreviated to as "The IRA" had its 1001 misuses as the fighting wing of the American secret service itself, this has been freely admitted to through the freedom of information act in America. For decades the IRA carried out their own private operations under orders from the American Government which included the killing of British soldiers and innocent civilians on the grounds of American security. The Americans even today will use any means necessary to protect the sovereignty of the republic of Ireland.

Lets look at the movement of people, without doubt when a person moves from one country to another there is ALWAYS a reason for this enter Dr Moayyad Al Kamali an alleged Arab who left the middle east to train and work as a doctor in Britain. There must have been a motive or reason therefore for this person to have moved yet again to Ireland from the UK and this synopsis is about to unravel certain scientific evidence against this contractor/agent.

As mentioned before Ireland is an annexe of America the CIA will NEVER relinquish over, the Irish themselves are forced to speak English as their first language. The Americans see Ireland as a country now under siege and threatened by countries such as China, Russia and North Korea and Iran. As we are aware all police stations communications and radio broadcast in Dublin the capital of Ireland as with nationwide stations are constantly monitored for state security reasons by the FBI and CIA as well as British Intelligence services. Computer records are also monitored and written into by British and American operatives from abroad and the political parties in Ireland take their orders directly from America with at least 25 percent of detectives and gardai (Irish Police) actually working with and for the CIA and British Intelligence services.

There is countless number of books and web sites dedicated to espionage and the Hotel Trade around the world with many well publicised assassinations within hotels themselves. In the UK in particular there includes the poisoning of a former KGB agent at a hotel there is of course the Hotel the Western press claim that was shown in the papers where the alleged norvichok Russian agents stayed and operated from and more recently the poison residues of a chemical agent found in a hotel linked to Navalys poisoning who is presently held as a traitor in a Russian prison.

Dr Moayyad Al Kamali is an expert in the use of chemicals and their long term harmful effects including permanent brain damage as used as a weapon against humans, his story begins when a group of hackers found unusual traits and residues within his own private business dealings (Wedgewood Hotel) and his involvement with certain organizations one of which is named as the Illuminati institution in Ireland. As previously mentioned nothing moves or manoeuvres in Ireland without the CIA knowing about it or being involved in therefore it is an obvious political statement to make but it must be stressed Dr Moayyad Al Kamali has both British Intelligence files and CIA files attached to him because of his known activities or more precisely because he had to be vetted by the CIA prior to being appointed to work for the Government in one of their hospitals as the head doctor the most important reason though without doubt is because he is allegedly Arabic or middle Eastern origin. Mossad undoubtedly hold records upon this doctor as too will Hamas and Governments such as Iraq, Lebanon, Palestine etc which makes Dr Moayyad Al Kamali an extremely powerful and rich person or rather an expendable commodity.

mycatstinx March 11, 2023 at 7:39 am

The Arabs themselves know how to gain British Intelligence files within the UK to them its child's play and once gained becomes a two way trading asset despite the agents loyalty, in other words once stolen intelligence files become a form of negotiation and the beginning to creating and carving of political and religious boundary lines for example Hamas agents are often double or triple agents its extremely complicated and is linked to the amounts of arms stolen every month from Israel army barracks a complicated affair if ever however keeping firearms under control is one of the paramount objectives of any army unfortunately though an objective that the Israel Government has yet to gain control over.

Dr Moayyad Al Kamali's files therefore will be of significant trading value as the CIA for decades has used psychiatry as both a threat and a weapon and there is no way out for this doctor after taking the millions of dollars into his personal accounts of American blood money .... quite literally his own listed Government records show Kamali to be personally worth more than 4 million dollars. Certain Arabs see taking American blood money from the hands of Satan as one of the highest of all crimes. Its a phenomenally intensified area as one Arab organization will claim Kamali is justified and running in parallel with Hamas agents in infiltrating military intelligence whilst another will say Allah does not support such behaviour, Iran for example being at war with contractors and agents of the CIA or those that deal in American blood money full stop period. In fact Iran's dossier on Dr Moayad Al Kamali is a big problem for everybody especially the Russians as his hotel is situated a mere 5 minute walk from the Russian Embassy in the UK where the story literally takes off, a CIA vetted contractor double parked outside of Putin's main European communication hub... takes a lot of explaining and scientifically/mathematically adds up to ONE thing only ESPIONAGE. When you think about it Kamali could have chosen any business out of countless thousands to get involved in instead he was assigned to a hotel. Why a hotel next to the Russians?? why not anywhere else there are over 250,000 listed B&B and hotels in the UK what is the mathematical probability out of the entire UK landmass Kamali sits with Mr Putin well this is just the beginning of bizarre unexplained phenomena that surrounds this particular agent. Kamali was found to be both the president of the psychiatry organization Illuminati, the head doctor at a hospital and the doctor at Wedgewood hotel at the same time, how can a doctor be in two different countries with a doctor's job in both at the same time... well the CIA certainly knew about this and British intelligence. You see the area where Wedgewood hotel is situated is a classified SECURITY ZONE because of its proximity to the Russian Embassy this means that the company Dr Moayad Al Kamali owns and its directors and staff are on a 24/7 CIA watch list, now get this whilst we are here Kamali has two working partners and this really is the icing on the spacecake... both his partners are called Kamali and a secretary also named Kamali and none of these people are related like none of them in math that just don't add.

Contractor agents that work for the secret service often sign up for a guaranteed time limit however many of them get paid secretly through other companies that's because if found the agent can just say I'm a business person with a number of jobs problem with that line is it doesn't wash especially if your running private business and being paid directly by the Government as a doctor because doctors aren't allowed to put capital gains before life and illness... we mean like it does work to be honest but who are you really fooling also a large percentage of these types in America get investigated by the FBI until the CIA step in say hey mack don't bother with these guys and that's exactly what's going on here you see Kamali was pumped with dollars that surface at least in 2014 that's because contractor/psychiatrist has to be covered well explain.

Kamali's role is a security role within CIA protection in others as well as being a doctor he has license given to him to lie in other words he has his orders when given to write false reports. The CIA need doctors in Ireland as contractors as deterrents against foreign agents, communists or persons they want permanently disposed of privately punished and made an example of and/or removed from Ireland on grounds of national security and basically they will do this. They pay contractors first before they give them clearance to operate, imagine if you can some persons have false reports written about them which Kamali often has done and then the money can be seen going into his bank accounts shortly after writing false reports about a patient... get the idea the two actions would tally the dirty deed followed by the payment. The FBI and CIA are better than this than the Russians because America is more capitalized the methods of blood money being paid to agents really are satanic and involve systems that are practically impossible to trace however certain contractors/drug cartels and Governments know exactly how to extract blood from a Washington stone... A doctor that owns 4 million dollars isn't really likely to be found operating in a hotel next to a Russian embassy and working as the head of a hospital and head of the Illuminati at the same time it's a bit like a police officer having a second job as a money lender it just doesn't wash to the educated and those that aren't blind to the ways of espionage.

There's no political way out for Kamali but hell he has CIA protection so in that sense you can say what you like about him it is estimated however Pakistan and African drug cartels have made in excess of over 50 million dollars out of his files without doubt and that just the drug side, you see there are connections between Dr Moayad Al Kamali and the drug and prostitution trade. The police in Ireland who work for the CIA can force ANY PERSON in Ireland into a hospital they do not permission or paperwork PERIOD, it's not only human rights offence it is both a political and capitalist weapon. If the police bring a person in you would never know what bent American or British secret service agent would be behind this act and what's more the amount of money that is made from the kidnapping and extortion paid by the trillions of dollars available annually to the CIA. Life is cheap so cheap that the CIA have to authorize mass free cocaine and heroin shipments in parallel with kidnappings and Kamali is heavily involved with drug cartels and bent cops he looks after drug dependents all day long, drug users in Ireland are paid for and work for the same type of American CIA operatives who have countless 1000s of drug users that still work with and for the former IRA as informers and look outs in security operations. Kamali can get a drug user to run around hospital wing claiming this person did this and that person did that... bang two days later somebody gets taken into a police station because of a young girl confessing to a doctor in a hospital... 3 in the morning the Irish police kick a door in a drug somebody into a police station because of a young girl's allegations the doctor stating in his/her professional opinion that the girl can't be lying because they are qualified to understand stress and illness and that's it can't argue... the person taken in could be a suspected member of an organization that uses weapons the police will lie the person held on remand in prison and then taken from prison using force against the persons despite no weapons ever being found into a hospital. End of story... The authorities in Ireland and the UK kick Muslims doors in all the time in the UK and Ireland and there is no justification to holding innocent persons some of these people become hostages many disappear, many never get any form of real legal representatives they are invisible to the press nobody can or will do anything for them when major organizations and politicians are approached they do not get involved when they try to claim political asylum they are treated with indifference and told they are delusional or have no case... Kamali is part of a CIA protection system that purposely creates stateless persons, he is used to strip a person's human rights away in exchange for American Blood money, he is no fool and in law ignorance is no defense within law being a doctor employed by the Government he is more than aware that the Irish Government takes orders and operates on behalf of the American government and even Sin Feinn the alleged democratic socialist party who represented the IRA during the so called war against British occupation of Northern Ireland have CIA agents within their hydro mists. Sin Feinn's loyalty is to the CIA that still protects former IRA members through protocol today not to a stateless innocent person from being prosecuted Biden personally sealed up that area so that none of recruited former IRA members that know work for the FBI and CIA as agents can ever be charged by the British Government for killing British soldiers and innocent British citizens on behalf of American state security.

It's only been a month since this was posted. In the past, Cringely has gone quiet for up to six months at a time. So it's too soon to say that it's the end.

But it does feel a bit like things are winding up around here.

Can ChatGPT write a MineServer update?

Jeremy Reimer May 31, 2023 at 11:29 am

Indeed it can! Scroll up to the top of the comments, then scroll down a bit, and you'll see a couple of them.

They weren't bad, to be honest. Very generic and of course ChatGPT completely missed the context of how Cringely himself operates the Mineserver "company" (although technically not any more as the company failed to pay its own licensing fees a few years back and is officially disbanded according to various documents) but it did find the usual list of excuses for delays, including shipping issues, parts issues, etc.

Cringely's "If I ignore it then it will all go away" strategy isn't the best one — tons of folks have been pleading with him to just come clean and write a final account of what really happened, and all will be forgiven — but it's what he's sticking to.

The main problem is that if Cringely admits to lying about the Mineservers, then he has to admit about lying about Eldorado Space, and about being Apple Employee #12, and a whole bunch of stuff that kind of unravels his entire career, so he's never going to do that. But all this stuff is out in the open now anyway, so it's sort of a lose-lose scenario for him.

And that's where we are, and have been for some time, and will be forever.
